

Wildlife: Offer to help the local filmmakers

Brenda Chai

KOTA KINABALU: Local filmmakers and nature enthusiasts are encouraged to produce contents that can help promote wildlife conservation in Sabah.

Scubazoo Operations Director Terence Lim (pic) said the company is willing to collaborate with anyone who shares the same passion and expose them to the international audience.

"We're looking for local producers, local storytellers and local presenters. We're really looking forward to working with these people to highlight them to the international market."

"There are a lot of conservation works and stories to be told here in Sabah," he said during a press conference to announce the upcoming Season 2 of the Borneo Wildlife Warriors (BWW), an online documentary series featuring wildlife animals in Sabah and a team of veterinarians and rangers tasked to saving them.

Scubazoo is a media company established in Sabah which has 20 years experience in actively filming and documenting reality shows on wildlife rescues through entertaining and informative series such as Borneo From Below, Borneo Jungle Diaries and the latest TV series, Borneo Wildlife Warriors.

Borneo Wildlife Warriors, which will premier next Wednesday, features a weekly series about wildlife animals in the jungles of Sabah and the people who commit their lives in protecting them through rescue and relocation missions.

Meanwhile, British environmental photojournalist Aaron "Bertie" Gekoski who is the presenter said that based on the viewers' responses from the first BWW series, the show had received positive feedback.

The presenter hopes that the BWW series would generate a huge interest among viewers worldwide and inspired them into action in wildlife conservation. The series can be watched at SZtv.

File pic of rescued pygmy elephants.